PREFACE

It gives me pleasure to present to the scholarly community a work of reference which shall facilitate historical research upon the life and times of Jawaharlal Nehru, a leader of the struggle for freedom as well as an architect of modern India. This catalogue of the correspondence of Jawaharlal Nehru, over the years 1903-47, shall equip researchers with detailed and rigorous information about the dialogue which Jawaharlal Nehru sustained with other individuals as well as with a variety of institutions, informal and formal, within the country. It is, therefore, an invaluable tool for historical research into the social, political and economic transformation of modern India.

I am happy to acknowledge the contribution of a number of my colleagues in the preparation of this catalogue. Smt. Indu Jolly carried the major burden of creating this work of reference; and she was ably assisted by Smt. Aruna Tandan in this task. Besides, Smt. Indrani Henderson, Smt. Vatsala Gulati and Smt. Usha Gururaj helped in the compilation of the catalogue; and Shri A.B. Sharma, Shri Uresh Chander Seth and Shri Surinder Pal Singh typed the manuscript. But above all, I would like to thank my colleague, Dr. Hari Dev Sharma, whose scholarly understanding of developments within modern India has provided this work of reference with the quality of rigour which our organisation can view with a measure of satisfaction.

USING THE CATALOGUE: A WORD TO THE READER

This Catalogue draws upon 6,248 letters exchanged by Jawaharlal Nehru with persons and institutions in India and overseas. As far as possible, the letters have been arranged and listed in alphabetical order of correspondents' surnames; and within each alphabet, chronologically. We have tried to date the undated letters, and to trace the places from where they were written. Such reconstruction on our part has been placed in square brackets. In the annotation, ambiguous references to men and matters have been made unambiguous with the help of other sources. Further, the nature of a document (as it is available in our archives) has been indicated with the help of terms such as 'holograph', 'autograph', or 'copy'.

To facilitate scholarly consultation of the Catalogue detailed indexes have been provided under three heads: 'Place Index', 'Name Index', and 'Subject Index'.

The 'Place Index' indicates places from where the letters originated. The references in this index are to the pages of the volume.

The 'Name Index' covers persons and institutions with whom Jawaharlal Nehru was in correspondence. Other names which feature in the Index are those that occur in the annotation. The references in the 'Name Index' pertain to the serial number of the document.

The 'Subject Index' has been prepared with a view to highlighting social, political and economic issues which feature in the letters. The views of Jawaharlal Nehru, wherever available on the above issues, have also been highlighted. Similarly, references to the policy of the Indian National Congress, on various issues, during the struggle for freedom have been specifically included. Titles of books, articles, journals, newspapers and plays have been given in italics. Cross-reference entries have been given in the Name and Subject indexes to facilitate consultation.

Finally, the initials M.N. and J.N. stand for Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal Nehru, respectively.
